The Indian Independence Movement was a series of events and activities that led to India's independence from British rule in 1947. The movement was led by several prominent leaders, including Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru, and Subhas Chandra Bose. One of the key events of the movement was the Salt March, also known as the Dandi March, which was a 24-day march from Ahmedabad to Dandi, a small village in Gujarat, to protest the British salt tax as it was seen as an unfair and oppressive law that affected the poor.

The march was led by Mahatma Gandhi, who believed in the power of non-violent resistance. Thousands of people joined the march, which covered a distance of over 240 miles. The march ended on April 6, 1930, when Gandhi and his followers reached Dandi and broke the salt law by picking up salt from the beach. This act of defiance sparked widespread protests and demonstrations across the country, forcing the British government to reconsider its policies.

3. What was the British salt tax, and why was it protested?
